

A group of Beefeaters in red uniforms and bearskin hats standing in front of the Tower of London. The image is slightly blurred, showing several guards in their traditional attire. One guard in the center is wearing a different hat, possibly a ceremonial one. The background shows the stone walls and towers of the Tower of London.

Ravens are intelligent birds and each of ours has their own personality. They can mimic sounds, play games and solve problems. One of our ravens at the Tower likes to lie on her back and play dead if she's not getting enough attention.

To prevent the ravens from flying away, the Ravenmaster trims their lifting feathers on one wing. This procedure does not hurt the birds in any way, but by unbalancing their flight, it ensures they stay safe and do not stray from the Tower.
